A compact, dense beauty, the Colorado Spruce is popular for good reason. Their smaller size and slower growth allow them to fit into many different landscapes. Their characteristics allow them to be used in a windbreak or as a stand alone beauty. Color can vary from green to silvery blue, depending on individual genetics. Do not plant too close together, as they need good air circulation. Spruces need well drained soils, and they do not like to be in soggy, waterlogged areas. (Zones 2 - 7)
