The Pagoda Dogwood is an architectural beauty with distinct tiered branch layers that are most noticeable in late spring when white flower clusters rest on the upper portions of the stems. The photo above shows an unpruned tree, but they can be limbed-up to create a more defined tree shape. It produces dark blue fruits and has multi-colored fall color. Due to the small size, they fit nicely along decks or patios. The Pagoda Dogwood is commonly used as an understory tree. (Zone 3 - 7)
